

Philipp Amann – European Cybercrime Centre (EC3)

Philipp Amann is the head of strategy of Europol's European Cybercrime Centre (EC3). EC3 strategy is responsible, among other things, for the delivery of a number of strategic, situational and tactical products, including EC3's flagship annual strategic product - the Internet Organised Crime Threat Assessment report. Other key areas of responsibility include prevention and awareness, stakeholder management, training management and internet governance.

Prior to joining the EC3, he held positions with various international organisations such as the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, the International Criminal Court and the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe.

Philipp has worked in various fields, including the financial sector, global disarmament and arms control, law enforcement and international law.

His professional experience is complemented by a PhD degree and a Master's degree in business informatics from the University of Vienna. He also holds an MSc in Forensic Computing and Cybercrime Investigation from the University College, Dublin.

Philipp will be discussing a three-pronged approach to fight cybercrime: forensics, strategy and operations.
